EDNA KIRK -

THE GREATEST EDUCATIONAL MASTERPIECE OF THE PRESENT AGE

Columbia University. Professor GEORGE W. KIRCHWEY, Kent Professor of Law, Columbia University School of Law, New York: "It is a miracle of book-making, and seems fully to justify the extravagant claims which you have made for it. It makes all other dictionaries look pale and ineffectual beside it."

THE FUNK & WAGNALLS

New Standard Dictionary

It is the latest, most complete, and most sumptuous dictionary in existence; a necessity in every school and study. It is the result of the highest scholarship and expert skill of over 380 of the world's most distinguished scholars and specialists.

Statistics of Its Greatness

450,000 Vocabulary Terms—50,000 more than any other dictionary; over 380 Editors and Specialists; 32,000 Quotations; 28,500 Synonyms and Antonyms; many Beautiful Colored Plates; 7,000 Illustrations; Cost over $1,450,000.

BRIEF MENTION OF A FEW OF ITS SURPASSING MERITS

One alphabetical order throughout is the characteristic arrangement of the contents of the Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary. The universal custom in Lexicography has been to arrange a dictionary in several distinct and separate departments.

Two Keys Are Included for Pronunciation; the revised Scientific Alphabet, and the textbook key.

Disputed Pronunciations have been submitted to a committee of twenty-five of the World's leading Educators and dealt with more thoroughly than ever before.

Compounding, Syllabication, and the Division of Words for Writing and Printing have been reduced to scientific systems.

In Defining, the Common, Present-day Meaning is given first—where it should be—and the obsolete meaning last.

Gives dates in connection with Biographical Entries and population figures for Geographical Entries.

Many Full-page Illustrations, some in over 40 colors, and 7,000 other illustrations are incorporated in the work.

Many Thousands of Important New Words are exclusively recorded and defined.

To the Department of Synonyms and Antonyms the New Standard devotes more space than any other work, being the only dictionary that gives antonyms as well as synonyms.

The Correct Use of Prepositions is appropriately explained with many illustrations.

INTRODUCTORY

This work is an abridgment of the FUNK & WAGNALLS NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, designed especially for desk use in the home, the office, the counting-house, the classroom, etc., and for use on the study or library table. It will be found particularly adaptable to college use, for it is sufficiently inclusive in its vocabulary and complete in its definitions to cover all words that one is likely to meet in study or in reading, and to give an adequate and readily intelligible idea of the meaning of every such word. Beyond this immediate design, the book will be found widely useful for all persons who desire to have a dictionary of convenient size readily accessible on the many occasions when the spelling, pronunciation, or meaning of a word is to be settled out of hand, since all statements herein given are as authoritative, as far as they go, as those of the larger work from which they are derived. Readers of every grade, in the office or the home, will find their needs very fully met by the wide range of vocabulary and definitions, while the avoidance as far as practicable of the merely technical or learned style makes all the information contained readily available for popular use.

The Vocabulary.

From the 450,000 words and phrases of the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY 80,000 have been selected that are in approved general and literary use. Exceeding care has been exercised to include every worthy word that will be found in the reading of standard English authors or of the best class of current literature. To make this selection thoroughly inclusive, those works of eminent English authors recommended by the "National Conference on Uniform Entrance Requirements in English" for the Colleges of the United States have been comprehensively and critically read with the endeavor to note every unusual word, as well as every use of a familiar word in an unusual sense, thus insuring the inclusion in this dictionary of practically all important words and meanings found in the so-called "English Classics." Special pains have also been taken to cover the recent advances of science and invention, so far as these have come into practical use, as in aviation, radioactivity, wireless telegraphy, etc.

Obsolete Words and Meanings.

It has been the fixed purpose not to encumber the pages with obsolete words and meanings known only to critical scholars and never met by ordinary readers. None such have been carried merely because retained by other dictionaries, since every thoroughly useless word occupies space urgently needed for living words and definitions. All that were deemed valuable, however, of carefully selected obsoletes from the works of Shakespeare, Malory, Milton, and other classical authors have been entered. Where an obsolete meaning is the original historic sense of the word, this has usually been retained. Obsolete words or senses (as understood in this Dictionary) are such as have not been used by writers of authority since the year 1800. Such are marked with the dagger (†). Words that are passing out of use, recently revived obsoletes, affectedly old-fashioned forms, and also old words occurring in the Bible or the Book of Common Prayer, altho no longer in use elsewhere, are marked as archaic (||). The greatest care has been taken to mark as obsolete or archaic all words and meanings that are really so, in order that the younger students especially may not be led to employ them on the supposition that they are still in approved use.

Colloquial, Dialectic, and Slang Terms.

Words and meanings that might be used in conversation by the most cultivated people, tho not in literary use, are characterized in this Dictionary as colloquial (Colloq.). Dialectic and slang words have been in the main excluded, tho some have been retained to meet the demands of the English classics chosen for the entrance examinations at our leading colleges and universities. Among the dialectic forms are many Scottish terms, which are given as an aid to the student in the intelligent reading of Scott, Barrie, Stevenson, and other representative Scottish authors. Unworthy slang and dialectic terms have been purposely omitted, the omission being commonly the stamp of disapproval.

One Alphabetical Order.

The vocabulary is one. Proper names, abbreviations, prefixes, suffixes, etc., will all be found in one alphabetical order. The saving of time and the avoidance of perplexity and confusion by this unity of treatment are beyond expression.

Prefixes and Suffixes.

All important prefixes and suffixes which enter into the composition of words receive separate treatment in alphabetical place; thus the prefix pro-, with its meaning in composition and its etymology, will be found in its proper place on page 620, while provide, of which it forms the first element, will be found in its correct alphabetical position on page 627.

Proper Names Defined.

The 6,700 proper names included in the vocabulary were selected from extensive lists, in the endeavor to give, so far as possible within the limited space, the names most likely to be looked for and most important to be found. The definitions of proper names include: for persons, a brief characterization, with date of birth and (if not now living) of death; for a country, island, etc., its situation, area in square miles, and population, and, in the case of a country or state, its capital; for a city, town, etc., its location and population, with note of any especially important event, as a battle, treaty, or the like; for mountains, the location and height; for rivers, the location and length in miles; for oceans, seas, and lakes, the location and area in square miles. Thus, within very limited space, is given a great amount of valuable biographical, historical, and geographical information.

Spelling.

The spelling of words is that of the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY, and will be found in harmony with the usage of the best modern authorities. When two ways of spelling the same word are equally, or almost equally, sanctioned by usage, the two forms have been bracketed together, the preference being for the one first given. In other cases the alternative word or words are given as a variant or variants after the definition (with the sign ‡ for a variant in current use, or † for an obsolete variant). In cases where the spelling of the variant would place it far away from the word defined, the variant is also entered in vocabulary place, with cross-reference to the form preferred; thus, cimeter and scimiter will be found in vocabulary place with reference to simitar, where the definition is given. In words fully Anglicized, "e" is preferred to the diphthongs "æ" and "œ", as in esthetic, homeopathy; but œsthetic and homœopathy are entered in place and referred to the preferred forms. In the spelling of geographical names the decisions of the United States Board on Geographic Names have been followed.

Simplified Spelling.

The simpler forms of spelling recommended for use by the American Philological Association and the Simplified Spelling Board will, in general, be found recorded under the regular spelling. Occasionally, the optional omission of a silent letter is indicated, by the use of a parenthesis or parentheses, as abatabl(e, abandon(e)d. These special forms are so given as in no case to supersede or obscure the commonly accepted spellings. See SPECIAL EXPLANATORY NOTES, Reformed Spellings, page vi.

Capitalization.

Only such words as should be written with capital initial letters are capitalized in the vocabulary, thus enabling the reader to see at a glance how to write the word. Where in any case usage varies, both the capitalized and the non-capitalized forms are indicated.

Compound Words.

The system of compounding words adopted by the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY has been applied, and the German double hyphen is used to distinguish hyphenated compound words, as driving-wheel, fire-escape, printing-press, from compounds in which words originally distinct are united without the hyphen, as coachman, sunbeam, wildcat, etc. The single hyphen is used merely to indicate division of words into syllables. Compounds will ordinarily be found under the first element; if not found there they should be sought under the second element, where, for special reasons, they are sometimes placed.

Pronunciation.

The plan of indicating the pronunciation of words by respelling in two keys followed by the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY has been followed also in this work. The disadvantages of having more than one symbol for the same sound, originated in the so-called Websterian dictionaries, are avoided by Key 1, in which each symbol has its own sound throughout the alphabet. For detailed explanation of the values of the different symbols, see page viii. In general, the preferences of the larger work are followed. In all matters of disputed pronunciation due consideration has been given to the decisions of the New Standard Dictionary's Advisory Committee of Philologists and Educators in charge of the Department of Disputed Pronunciations, and in many instances, where two differing pronunciations have an approximately equal weight of authority, both are given, as in the case of such words as advertisement, levee, paresis, vase, etc. In cases where derivatives are not respelled, the pronunciation is believed to be sufficiently indicated by hyphenization and accent, each syllable having the pronunciation of the corresponding syllable in the main word from which the derivative is formed. Thus, in a-bat'-a-ble the syllable -bat' is pronounced as in A-BATE'; in mov'a-ble the syllable mov' has the pronunciation of the main word MOVE, from which it is derived. So in all similar cases.

Definitions.

Special care has been taken to make the definitions at once comprehensive and concise by embracing recent meanings and distinctions, and by making the general definitions thoroughly inclusive. Where, as often, it has been necessary to abridge the definitive statements of the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY or to condense several definitions into one, the definitions of the larger book have been critically studied, and their essential meaning given with all possible fulness and exactness.

The rule has been observed throughout of giving the most common meaning first, then others in the order of their divergence. Meanings nearly akin are separated by semicolons; but, for those essentially distinct, numerals are employed. As a rule, each definition begins with a definitive statement, made as inclusive as possible to embrace all that belongs to that definition, and as exclusive as possible to shut out everything else. Following the definitive statement, one or more apposite synonyms are usually given. In some instances, chiefly in subordinate definitions, a synonym only has been used, where the definition of that synonym in its own place will tell all that it is necessary to know in that case about the word which the synonym has been used to define.

Preference Given to Popular Terms.

The purpose of making this an English dictionary of a popular type, clear and intelligible, has been kept steadily in view. To this end, wherever there has been a choice between a popular and a technical term, the popular term, if equally accurate, has always been preferred. It has been held that a thoroughly intelligible definition, even if less technically precise, would give a better idea of the meaning of a word than an exact scientific or philosophical definition that would be difficult to comprehend.

Synonyms and Antonyms.

The value of synonyms for purposes of definition, as well as of style, is now generally conceded. The meanings of allied words are not only better understood but better remembered by comparison or contrast, while no selection for use is adequate except that which chooses the very word that fits the immediate occasion as no other word could so exactly do. The editor of this dictionary, who prepared the synonyms for the original STANDARD and also for the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY, has had personal charge of this department, and has drawn freely upon the material in the larger work, and also (with consent of the publishers) upon his own book, "English Synonyms, Antonyms, and Prepositions;" he has also incorporated much new matter prepared especially for this book and never before published.

The synonym matter here contained embraces more than 6,000 separate entries, including discriminating articles and groups, occupying 11,700 lines of type, which by means of brief and pointed comparisons bring out simply and clearly the nice distinctions existing between words of allied meanings, especially with reference to approved present-day usage, meanings found only in our older literature being lightly touched in passing. There are also 754 lists of antonyms, a feature not found in any other abridged work of this size; these will be found very useful to the writer for purposes of contrast and antithesis, and have also definitive value, since often the clearest definition of a word is found in the statement of what it is not.

Prepositions. The various prepositions have been defined in alphabetical place with special care, and where a preposition is so closely associated with a verb, adjective, etc., or with a certain meaning of such word, as to be the necessary or the natural adjunct for expressing the meaning, such preposition is noted; as in the following definitions of the verb consist: "1. To be composed; be made up: followed by of. 2. To have as its foundation, substance, or nature; be: followed by in. 3. To be compatible; harmonize: followed by with." Also, in connection with the lists of synonyms under 236 words, the correct prepositions to be used, with illustrations of such use, have been given. Thus, under the word employ, at the end of the synonym paragraph, will be found "Prep.: Employ in, on, upon, or about a work, business, etc.; for a purpose; at a stipulated salary;" similarly, under hinder, "Hinder one in his progress; from acting promptly; by opposition."

The Grouping of Words. In those cases where many words begin with the same prefix, as in- or un-, and where the definition of each is readily found by combining the meaning of the prefix with that of the second element, such words are simply listed under the appropriate prefix, without definition, those that for any reason require separate treatment being omitted from the list and defined in the vocabulary. In all such lists, the syllabication and accents of the listed words have been given, as it is chiefly for spelling, syllabication, and accent that such words would be looked up in a dictionary. The various prefixes and suffixes will be found defined in vocabulary place.

Derivatives. Derivatives are often entered directly after their primitives without definition, where the meaning is readily gathered by making the appropriate modification, as of an adjectival to an adverbial meaning, or the like. This is particularly the case with adverbs regularly formed in -ly, qualitative nouns in -ness, verbal nouns in -er, -ing, and -ment, and nouns of office or quality formed from other nouns by the addition of -age, -hood, or -ship. The giving of undefined derivatives has important use in supplying information of syllabication and accent. Where the derivative has special importance, or has acquired some meaning that would not appear from the direct combination of the meaning of the primitive with that of the suffix, such derivative is entered with definition, either under its primitive or in vocabulary place. Thus eater is entered without definition under eat; but bumper is defined in vocabulary place, and coherer is defined as a derivative under cohere. Adverbs that add the syllable -ly directly to the adjectival form, qualitative nouns that similarly add the syllable -ness, verbal nouns in -ment, and a few others are often indicated by simply entering the final syllable, with the characterization of its part of speech under the primitive, as -ly, adv., -ness, n., -ment, n., etc., where space is saved by so doing. In every such case the suffix is to be added to the full form of the leading word next preceding. If an adjective ends in l, the addition of -ly thus results in doubling the l; as, principal + -ly becomes principally. If there is a change of form of the primitive upon the addition of the suffix, the word is spelled out in full, as (under guilty) guiltily, adv., and guiltiness, n. A multitude of such derivatives, particularly of adverbs ending in -ly and nouns in -ness, are made and used at will. These, in very many cases, it has not been thought necessary to record, where they are regular both in form and meaning.

Variant Forms of Words. In many cases, a word having the same meaning as the vocabulary word, whether from the same or a different root, is given as a variant, after the etymology, with the sign (‡) if a living word; otherwise with the obsolete sign (†). If a variant corresponds only to a single meaning, it is given directly after that meaning. Different spellings of the same word are similarly treated (see SPELLING), as adjective and adjectival, etc.

Etymologies. The etymologies have been given in a clear but condensed form, tracing each word as far as practicable to its ultimate source, that the reader may know whence the word started, and just how it came to have its present signification. For the benefit of the student, and for ease of consultation, words from the Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, etc., in the etymologies have been transliterated, thus facilitating the reading of all foreign words, of whatever origin. See SPECIAL EXPLANATORY NOTES.

Tables and Lists. A number of valuable tables are included, containing matters to which ready and repeated reference is desirable, as of coins, of constellations, planets, and stars, of weights and measures (including a full exposition of the metric system, with factors for conversion), of chemical elements (giving the atomic weight, specific gravity, and fusing- or melting-point of each, with the name of the discoverer and the source from which it is derived), of Presidents of the United States, and Sovereigns of England, and under such words as Latin, law, etc., are lists in the form of run-in definitions characterizing the various types or divisions in the several subjects.

The Pictorial Illustrations. The illustrations, more than 1,200 in number, have been selected, not for mere embellishment, but as aids in definition, conveying the meaning of terms through the eye to the mind as, in very many cases, mere words can not do. These illustrations have been in great part made especially for this work, and will be found scientifically exact and artistically accurate. A number of full-page groups of illustrations will be found distributed through the book. The selections were made with the view of supplementing the definitions (see aeroplane, agriculture, architecture, knot, musical instruments, ship, etc.) and for their educational value. The illustrations of barks, flowers, and leaves will be found useful in botanical work, those of fish and birds to the student of natural history, and so forth.

Foreign Words and Phrases. Foreign words and phrases have been for the most part omitted from the vocabulary as forming no integral part of an English dictionary. A limited number which seem specially worthy of note have been entered in the department of Foreign Phrases in the Appendix. Some such words or phrases, either by frequency of use in English speech, by the need of fuller treatment, or for other special reasons, have seemed to demand place in the vocabulary, as de facto, de jure, in statu quo, on dit, pari passu, etc.

The editor desires gratefully to acknowledge the faithful and efficient labors of the entire staff, and especially of FRANCIS H. MEDHURST, D.LITT., in constant and helpful collaboration.

It is believed that for general desk use, for the purposes of the individual reader, as well as for the use of students in the classroom, this work will be accorded a worthy place in the now well-accredited series of the FUNK & WAGNALLS STANDARD DICTIONARIES. J. C. F.

The receding tide of the WORLD WAR having left high and dry on the sands of time the flotsam and jetsam of language, it became necessary to add to the following pages new words and new personal and place names, as of commanders, cities, battlefields, ships, etc., brought into prominence during hostilities and afterward. This has been done, and the text has been carefully revised.

The current edition contains a number of new terms and names, as well as the statistics of population of the United States, based on the reports of the Fourteenth United States Census (1920); those of the Dominion of Canada for 1921 as far as officially announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Ottawa; those of Great Britain, including England, Scotland, and Wales only, as published by the Registrars General of the Census, August, 1921; those of the Statistical Bureau of Germany, published in 1920; and those of Japan for 1920, and those of such other nations as have issued official reports, as the Argentine Republic, the Australian Commonwealth, and the Dominion of New Zealand, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, France, etc. Thanks are due to the MANUFACTURERS' AIR-CRAFT ASSOCIATION for cooperation in illustrating the different types of aircraft. SPECIAL EXPLANATORY NOTES

Comparison of Adjectives; Plurals of Nouns.

☞Where the COMPARATIVE AND SUPERLATIVE DEGREES OF ADJECTIVES and ADVERBS, and the PLURALS OF NOUNS are not given, they are formed regularly, according to the simplest rules of grammar.

The pronunciation of plurals of nouns is indicated either by respelling or by the sign (ˢ) inserted after the plural form. EXAMPLE: du'ty, 1 dūˑtu; 2 dūˑty, n. [DU'TIES[ˢ], pl.] The sign (ˢ) is used to indicate that the pronunciation of the plural is obtained by adding "s" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. Thus, DU'TIES is pronounced dūˑtiz.

Verbs and Their Participles, Etc.

☞Where the TENSE AND PARTICIPIAL FORMS OF A VERB are not given, add -ed to the vocabulary word for the imperfect tense and the past participle, and -ing for the present participle, except in compound verbs. See COMPOUND WORDS, below.

The pronunciation of the participles of verbs is indicated as follows:

The sign (ᵗ) added after a verb, or after Roman I., as I[ᵗ]. (when several parts of speech are grouped under one vocabulary entry), indicates that the pronunciation of the imperfect or past participle of this verb is obtained by adding "t" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. EXAMPLE: look[ᵗ], 1 luk; 2 lo͝ok, v. By adding "t" to the pronunciation of look, the pronunciation of looked, pp., is obtained, thus: luk + t = lukt; so blotch, 1 blech; 2 blo͝och. I[ᵗ]. vt., indicates that the imperfect or past participle, blotched, is pronounced blecht.

The sign (ᵈ) added after a verb, or after Roman I., as I[ᵈ]. (when several parts of speech are grouped under one vocabulary entry), indicates that the pronunciation of the imperfect or past participle of this verb is obtained by adding "ed" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. EXAMPLES: amend[ᵈ], 1 ə-mend'; 2 ə-mĕnd'. By adding "ed" to the pronunciation of amend, the pronunciation of amended, imp. and pp., is obtained, thus: ə-mend' + ed = ə-mend'ed; so amount, 1 ə-mount'; 2 ə-mount'. I[ᵈ]. vi., indicates that the imperfect or past participle is pronounced ə-mount'ed.

The pronunciation of the imperfect and past participle of the verbs is obtained, where no sign is given, by adding "d" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. EXAMPLES: love, 1 luv, 2 lŏv; loved, 1 luvd, 2 lŏvd; cable, 1 kāˑbl, 2 cāˑbl; cabled, 1 kēˑbld, 2 cāˑbld.

COMPOUND WORDS are defined under their first element, except when some special reason, as of classification, requires them to be grouped under the second element.

The imperfects and participles of verbs formed by adding a prefix (if not given with the entry), as disabuse, disagree, will be found under the final element of each compound, as under abuse, agree.

Etymologies, Etc.

Where the derivation of a word has been traced through more than one language in the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY, condensation is secured in the present work by indicating the intervening language or languages by means of superior letters; the intervening languages (where more than one is noted) being given in the order which the derivation of the word has followed: thus, under the word butter, n., the expression [< Gr.[L+AS] boutyron] indicates that the word butter has come into the English language from the Greek boutyron through the medium of the Latin, and later of the Anglo-Saxon, with various modifications in the process of transition.

SUFFIXES, as -ly, -ness, following the treatment of any vocabulary word, denote that the suffix is to be added directly to the bold-face word that immediately precedes it, to form the corresponding adverb and noun. EXAMPLE: Under hate will be found hateful, a. -ly, adv., -ness, n., indicating that the adverb is hatefully and the noun hatefulness; also, hopeless, a. -ly, adv., -ness, n., indicating that the adverb is in this latter case hopelessly, and the noun hopelessness.

THE SINGLE HYPHEN (-) connects parts of a word that are arbitrarily separated, as at the end of a line, or in the division of words into syllables, the syllables which it connects being closely joined in ordinary writing or printing. The single hyphen is omitted when the primary or secondary accent is used, as in vocabulary words: as-tron'o-my for astronomy: in"di-vid'u-al for individual.

THE DOUBLE HYPHEN (=) connects only the parts of a compound word, and indicates that the parts so joined are to be connected by a hyphen in ordinary writing or printing; as, half-mast (written ordinarily half-mast).

THE SINGLE ACCENT (') indicates the primary or chief accent; as, a'ble.

THE DOUBLE ACCENT (") indicates the secondary accent; as, as-so"ci-a'tion; mul"ti-pli-ca'tion.

Abbreviations and Arbitrary Signs.

[Poet.] Poetical.	* = hypothetical.

Reformed Spellings.

The reformed spellings recommended by the American Philological Association and the Philological Society of England are marked with a small superior [ᵃ]; those recommended by the Simplified Spelling Board are marked with superior [ˢ]. The reformed spellings are given sometimes in fully respelled form, sometimes by putting a parenthesis mark before (and, if necessary, after) a letter in the vocabulary spelling which in the reformed spelling is omitted. Thus, ca'pa-bl(e[ᵃ], fys'ic[ᵉ] (physic) are spellings recommended by the two philological societies; fo'no-graf[ˢ], con-serv(e[ᵃ]ˢ, con-serv(e)d'[ˢ], spellings recommended by the Simplified Spelling Board—the e being dropped from the last two.

Illustrations.

The fractional numbers given in connection with the illustrations of certain animals denote the proportion which the illustration bears to the animal illustrated.

METHOD OF COMPOUNDING WORDS

General Principles.

1. That all words should be separate when used in regular grammatical relation and construction, unless they are jointly applied in some arbitrary way.

2. That abnormal association of words generally indicates unification in sense, and hence compounding in form.

3. That no expression in the language should ever be changed from two or more words into one (either hyphened or solid) without change of sense.

The first of these principles forbids joining an adjective and a noun in regular use (including in the classification as adjectives all words used with clear adjectival force); as, spinal column, chestnut horse, brick house, fellow citizen, he bear, man servant, brother officer, home run.

Arbitrary application of such terms requires that they should be joined. Thus we have blue stocking for the stocking itself, but bluestocking for a woman, and redbreast is the common form of the name of a bird with a red breast.

The first principle, moreover, keeps a regular adverb separate from the adjective it modifies, even when the two express one attribution; as, "highly colored wings," "recently published book."

The second principle makes two nouns used together as one name become one word, if the first is not really attributive. Thus, while brick is attributive in brick house (a house made of bricks), it is not attributive in brick-yard (a yard where bricks are made). Brick in the first instance has the same qualifying sense that bricken would have if that were used, and so is an adjective, properly standing alone; but in the second instance it has no sense other than the naming of what is made in the yard, and no quality or attribute of the yard is noted, except in the name as a whole.

The second principle requires compounding:

1. When two adjectives, a noun and an adjective, or any two or more parts of speech are abnormally associated to express one attribution; as, a down-stairs room; dark-brown hair, or hair that is dark-brown; a well-known man; knee-deep snow, or the snow is knee-deep; free-trade doctrines; a silk-and-cotton fabric; North-American birds.

2. When one of two words used together as a verb, an adverb, or any part of speech, is in such use not placed in accordance with a rule of grammar; as, to go down-town; to halter-break a horse; a cross-action; a counter-complaint; broad-mindedly; after-ages.

Rules for Selection of Forms.

The legitimate conclusion from these principles is, that if one term having elements of certain kinds is properly a compound word, so is every other exactly similar term. The following categories or rules are thus obtained:

1. Every name that shows mere ellipsis and inversion of a phrase containing two nouns is a compound noun.

A "box for a hat" is commonly called a hat-box; "a brush for the hair," a hair-brush; "a stove for cooking," a cooking-stove or cook-stove. It may be safely affirmed that hat-box is printed as a hyphened compound word much more frequently than it is printed as two words, and the same is true of hair-brush; so we select the compound form as fixed in the best usage. Pill-box, shoe-box, paper-box, ribbon-box, and collar-box properly have the same form as hat-box, and so on through the entire range of known or possible boxes that may be named by the word box preceded by the name of what the box is to contain. As of boxes, so of brushes, and so also of everything named in this way—every such name, except as noted below, is given as a hyphened compound word. Some names that are unquestionably compounds in their nature have never been so written, and it would be pedantic to insist that they should be. In usage, almost universally, such words as company, association, asylum, have been kept separate, as in railroad company, racing association, insane asylum. There is no error in writing any one of these as a compound, but there is no urgent reason for doing so.

Seeming Exceptions.

I. Some uses in which the first of two nouns really stands as an adjective are as follows:

(1) With the sense "made of," as in silk dress, brick house, feather bed, pumpkin pie, stone wall.

(2) With the sense "having the shape or the character or quality of," as in barrel vault, alligator forceps, companion picture, he bear, man milliner, man servant, boy bishop, bull calf, brother officer, fellow citizen, mesh structure.

(3) With the sense "pertaining to, suitable for, or representing," as in parlor clock, city officer, district attorney, government employee, railroad supplies, insurance office, church furniture.

(4) With the sense "characterized by," as in diamond ring, cylinder press, cupola furnace.

(5) With the sense "situated in, having a character naturally implied from situation or connection," as in mountain streams, country gentleman, ocean steamer, school etiquette, society manners.

[In specific names of this kind, however, compounding is required by the fact of specification, which is merely naming. For some common compounds other than such purely specifying names no reason is apparent, unless accent be taken as a reason; but here the indefinable border-line that exists in all human affairs seems to be encountered. Thus (a) we have sea-anemone, sea-gull, field-mouse, house-fly, mountain-dew (illicit whisky), etc., and, (b) while we say and write as two words o"cean steam'er, we say as one word wa'ter-an"imal, and it should be so written.]

(6) With the sense "acting in support of, advocating," as in Jackson voters, silver advocates, silver man, prohibition speaker.

(7) With the sense "residing, existing, or originating in, or coming from (a place)," as in Brooklyn politics, Bath brick, New York schools, Florida oranges.

(8) With the sense "originated or made by, or named after," as in Crookes tube, Williams College.

II. Apposition.—Placing two nouns in apposition is very nearly the same in effect as using the first as an adjective, the difference being that in a case of real apposition either word may be used alone for the thing named, as in monarch oak, knight templar, knight companion.

2. Possessive phrases used as specific names are compound words.

Literature exhibits such names of plants, etc., in different forms. Certain books have some of them compounded and others as two words; as, hare's-tail for one plant and lion's tail for another. Certain other books have the difference reversed; as, lion's-tail and hare's tail.

It is absolutely impossible to make a record of the use of these names showing differences in form that can be proved to be established. Every such name given in this Dictionary is joined by a hyphen, excepting a few long established in continuous form, as coltsfoot, sheepshead.

3. Some words representing phrases in literal sense have become established in the solid form; as, sunbeam, daylight, hillside, loophole.

4. Some generic nouns are used, in certain classes of names, almost like mere suffixes; as, man, craft, master, weed.

Words like footman, coachman, statecraft, witchcraft, shipmaster, milkweed, and seaweed have the solid form in this Dictionary.

Every specific name of a fish that has a monosyllabic specifying element, with fish as the generic element, is given in continuous form; as, goldfish, bluefish, dogfish. Longer names of this kind have the hyphen.

5. Most words used to designate something named from having as a characteristic or adjunct that which is expressed by the elements of the name are given in the solid form.

A man who wears a red coat is called a redcoat; a man who watches or looks out is called a lookout, and said to be on the "lookout"; a plant that looks like a golden rod is called goldenrod; another having a black berry is called the blackberry; and many other things are named in this way—by making a word of the two words naming a prominent feature, likeness, characteristic, or the like. Predominance of the solid form in literature for such names is easily provable, tho they are printed in all three forms—two words, hyphened, and continuous. Exceptional use of the hyphen in this work occurs in words that are made clearer by it, as mouse-ear.

The forms given in heavy type throughout this Dictionary are very carefully selected and recommended for use.

REVISED SCIENTIFIC ALPHABET

The Revised Scientific Alphabet was constructed by a Committee of the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association on the basis of The American Philological Association's alphabet of 1877. It was adopted by that Department at Mobile, Ala., February, 1911, officially endorsed by the three linguistic societies of America, The American Philological Association, The Modern Language Association, and The American Dialect Society, during December, 1912, and is used in the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY. The essential principles of its construction are the following:

1. One symbol, and only one, for each sound, so that in whatever combination a given symbol appears, its value is unchanging and unmistakable.

2. The vowel letters have their Continental (or Latin) values. Thus the phonetic alphabet used here shows exactly the character of a sound, its connection with related sounds, and (if the sound is diphthongal) its elements and their value.

3. Diphthongs are represented by the symbols of their respective elements. Thus, the diphthong in aisle consists of two simple vowels, those of a in ah, and i in police, that is, the diphthong is a + ī, ail.

4. Diacritic marks are almost wholly discarded; only one is used, namely, the macron, and this always as a sign of length.

5. The so-called "obscure" vowels are recognized as actual and established elements of standard English speech. In wholly unstressed syllables, every vowel is altered in quality and reduced in sharpness of utterance to one or the other of two neutral or "obscure" vowels. The more frequent of them is the somewhat muffled sound heard in the unstressed syllable of about, sofa; the other that heard in habit, rnew.

6. Familiar digraphs (ch, sh, th) are retained as a concession to English spelling habits; but the two letters are tied in order to indicate that they represent a single sound. Thus the sound of ch in church is represented by c͡h, of sh in she by s͡h, of th in thee by t͡h, and of th in three by t͡h.

KEYS TO PRONUNCIATION

As in the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY, two pronunciation keys are here used. The first (Key 1) is the Revised Scientific Alphabet; the second (Key 2), made by means of diacritic marks, is such as has long been in use in textbooks and in the older dictionaries.

The following table gives the values of the symbols in the two Keys, except those which, because they have their usual English spelling or alphabetic values, are already familiar.

H	H	as in loch (Scotch), ach, mich (German).
ü	ü	as in Lübeck (German), Dumas (French).
ṅ	ṅ	as in bon (French).

The foreign sounds (H, ü, ṅ) can not be represented in English spellings, but must be described in detail.

H is made with the tongue almost in position for k (as in lock). The difference is that for H the tongue does not wholly close the passage, so that the breath rushes out with great friction, making a sound like a very rough h. If the vowel preceding H is made in the front of the mouth (as German i, e, ü, ö), the H is also forward, and is then made by forcing the breath out while the tongue is held firmly in the initial position for English y.

ü represents a sound made by pronouncing ĭ (the vowel-sound of see), with the lips at the same time fully pursed or rounded as for whistling. It may be noted, also, that the foreign sound represented in this dictionary by the symbol ŭ (as French danseuse, daṅ″sŭz′) is not exactly the vowel heard in the English burn, earn, etc., but is approximately that vowel sounded while the lips are fully pursed or rounded.

ṅ is a symbol indicating that the n itself is silent, but has imparted a nasal quality to the preceding vowel.

Syn.: bring low, cast down, debase, degrade, depress, discredit, disgrace, dishonor, humble, humiliate, lower, reduce, sink. Abase refers only to outward conditions. Debase applies to quality or character. The coinage is debased by excess of alloy, the man by vice. Humble in present use refers chiefly to feeling of heart; humiliate to outward conditions. To disgrace may be to bring or inflict odium upon others, but the word is chiefly and increasingly applied to deserved moral odium; he disgraced himself by his conduct. To dishonor a person is to deprive him of honor that should or might be given. To discredit one is to injure his reputation, as for veracity or solvency. A sense of unworthiness humbles; a shameful insult humiliates; imprisonment for crime disgraces. Degrade may refer to station; as, an officer is degraded by being reduced to the ranks; he is disgraced by cowardice: but degrade is now chiefly used of character; vile practises degrade; drunkenness is a degrading vice. Misfortune or injustice may abase the good; nothing but their own ill-doing can debase, degrade, or disgrace them.—Ant.: advance, aggrandize, dignify, elevate, exalt, honor, promote, raise, uplift.

A solitary thinker may be confused by some difficulty in a subject; one is embarrassed in the presence of others. Confusion is of the intellect, embarrassment (as here considered) is of the feelings. A witness may be embarrassed by annoying personalities, so as to become confused in statements. To mortify a person is to bring upon him a painful sense of humiliation, whether because of his own or another's fault or failure. We abhor a traitor, despise a coward, detest a liar. We dislike an uncivil person. We abhor cruelty, hate tyranny. We loathe a reptile or a flatterer. A building that is burned to the ground is said to be destroyed by fire. Annihilate, as a philosophical term, signifies to put absolutely out of existence. As far as our knowledge goes, matter is never annihilated, but only changes its form. Abolish is not said of laws. There we use repeal, abrogate, nullify, etc.: repeal by the enacting body, nullify by revolutionary proceedings; a later statute abrogates, without formally repealing, any earlier law with which it conflicts. An appellate court may reverse or set aside the decision of an inferior court. Overthrow may be used in either a good or a bad sense; suppress is commonly in a good, subvert always in a bad sense; as, to subvert our liberties; to suppress a rebellion. The law prohibits what may never have existed; it abolishes an existing evil. We abate a nuisance, terminate a controversy. Compare CANCEL; DEMOLISH; EXTERMINATE.—Ant.: authorize, cherish, confirm, continue, enact, establish, institute, introduce, legalize, promote, reinstate, renew, repair, restore, revive, set up, support, sustain.

Syn.: abhorrence, abuse, annoyance, aversion, crime, curse, detestation, disgust, evil, execration, hatred, horror, iniquity, nuisance, offense, plague, shame, villainy, wickedness. Abomination (from the L. ab omen, a thing of ill omen) was originally applied to anything held in religious or ceremonial aversion or abhorrence; as, "That which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." Luke xvi, 15. The word is oftener applied to the object of such aversion or abhorrence than to the state of mind that so regards it; in common use abomination signifies something very much disliked or loathed, or that deserves to be. A toad is to many an object of disgust; a foul sewer is an abomination. As applied to crimes, abomination is used of such as are especially brutal, shameful, or revolting; theft is an offense; infanticide is an abomination.—Ant.: affection, appreciation, approval, benefit, blessing, delight, desire, enjoyment, esteem, gratification, joy, satisfaction, treat.

a-buv'ᴱ, } head; higher up; on the upper side. Above is often used as a. or n., by ellipsis. II. prep. Vertically over; on the top of; upon; in excess of; superior to; beyond; free from the reach, power, or influence of; not liable to. [< AS. ābufan, < an, on, + bufan, above.]
Syn.: on, over, upon. Above is the most inclusive of these prepositions. It can ordinarily be substituted for on, upon, or over; as, the boards were piled one on or upon another (one above another); the hawk flies over the wood (above the wood). But it will be seen that while above is more inclusive it is less definite: the boards laid one on another are in contact, but when laid one above another, they may not touch. Over contains often an intimation, tho it may be slight, of extension or motion across, while above may simply imply greater elevation. If we say, the mountain towers above the plain, we think only of its height; but if we say, the mountain towers over the plain, we think of the plain as in the shadow of the mountain and dominated by it. So we say the mountain is 7,000 feet above the sea, where it would be impossible to say 7,000 feet over the sea. Upon is practically identical with on, both in meaning and use, preference of either over the other being generally for euphonic reasons; upon in many connections is somewhat more formal or dignified than on.

As used of human authorities, absolute signifies free from limitation by other authority and supreme exalted over all other; as, an absolute monarch, the supreme court. As absolute power in human hands is always abused, the unfavorable meaning of the word predominates. Autocratic power is absolute power self-established and self-maintained. Despotic is commonly applied to a masterful or severe use of power, which is expressed more decidedly by tyrannical. Arbitrary may be used in a good sense; as, the pronunciation of proper names is arbitrary; but the bad sense is the prevailing one; as, an arbitrary proceeding, arbitrary power. An irresponsible ruler is likely to be tyrannical. Authoritative, implying the right to claim authority, imperative, peremptory, and positive are used ordinarily in the good sense; as, an authoritative definition; an imperative demand; a peremptory command; positive instructions. Syn.: acquit, clear, discharge, exculpate, exempt, exonerate, forgive, free, justify, liberate, pardon, release, set free. To absolve, in the strict sense, is to set free from any bond. One may be absolved from a promise by a breach of faith on the part of one to whom the promise was made. To absolve from sins is formally to remit their condemnation and penalty, regarded as a bond upon the soul. To acquit of sin or crime is to free from the accusation of it, pronouncing one guiltless; the innocent are rightfully acquitted; the guilty may be mercifully absolved. Compare JUSTIFY: PARDON.—Ant.: accuse, bind, charge, compel, condemn, convict, impeach, inculpate, obligate, oblige.—Prep.: One is absolved from (rarely of) a promise, a sin, etc.

A fluid that is absorbed is taken up into the mass of the absorbing body, with which it may or may not permanently combine. A substance is consumed which is destructively appropriated by some other substance, being, or agency, so that it ceases to exist or to be recognized as existing in its original condition; fuel is consumed in the fire, food in the body; consume is also applied to whatever is removed from the market for individual use; as, silk and woolen goods are consumed. Syn.: appropriate, detach, discriminate, distinguish, distract, divert, eliminate, purloin, remove, separate, steal, take away, withdraw. The central idea of withdrawing makes abstract in common speech a euphemism for appropriate (unlawfully), purloin, steal. In mental processes we discriminate between objects by distinguishing their differences; we separate some one element from all that does not necessarily belong to it, abstract it, and view it alone. The mind is abstracted when it is withdrawn from all other subjects and concentrated upon one, diverted when it is drawn away from what it would or should attend to by some other interest, distracted when the attention is divided among different subjects, so that it can not be given properly to any. The trouble with the distracted person is that he is not abstracted. Compare ABBREVIATION; ABRIDGMENT; ABSTRACTED; DISCERN.—Ant.: add, combine, complete, conjoin, fill up, increase, restore, strengthen, unite.—Prep.: The purse may be abstracted from the pocket; the substance from the accidents; a book into a compend.

ab-stract'ed, 1 ab-strakt'ed; 2 ăb-străct'ĕd, a. 1. Absent-minded. 2. Separated from all else; apart; abstruse.

Syn.: absent, absent-minded, absorbed, heedless, inattentive, indifferent, listless, negligent, oblivious, preoccupied, thoughtless. As regards mental action, absorbed, abstracted, and preoccupied refer to the cause, absent or absent-minded to the effect. The man absorbed in one thing will appear absent in others. A preoccupied person may seem listless and thoughtless, but the really listless and thoughtless have not mental energy to be preoccupied. The absent-minded man is oblivious of ordinary matters, because his thoughts are elsewhere. One who is preoccupied is intensely busy in thought; one may be absent-minded simply through inattention, with fitful and aimless wandering of thought. Compare ABSTRACT.—Ant.: alert, attentive, on hand, prompt, ready, thoughtful, wide-awake.

Syn.: anomalous, chimerical, erroneous, false, foolish, ill-advised, ill-considered, ill-judged, inconclusive, incorrect, infatuated, insane, irrational, ludicrous, mistaken, monstrous, nonsensical, paradoxical, preposterous, ridiculous, senseless, stupid, unreasonable, wild. That is absurd which is contrary to the first principles of reasoning; as, that a part should be greater than the whole is absurd. A paradoxical statement appears at first thought contradictory or absurd, while it may be really true. Anything is irrational when clearly contrary to sound reason, foolish when contrary to practical good sense, silly when petty and contemptible in its folly, erroneous when containing error that vitiates the result, unreasonable when there seems a perverse bias or an intent to go wrong. Monstrous and preposterous refer to what is overwhelmingly absurd; as, "O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two," SHAKESPEARE 1 King Henry IV, act ii, sc. 4. One may be justly reproached. To impose on or to victimize one is to injure him by abusing his confidence. To persecute one is to ill-treat him for opinion's sake, commonly for religious belief; to oppress is generally for political or pecuniary motives. Misemploy, misuse, and pervert are commonly applied to objects rather than to persons. Syn.: abetter or abettor, accomplice, ally, assistant, associate, attendant, coadjutor, colleague, companion, confederate, follower, helper, henchman, participator, partner, retainer. Colleague is used always in a good sense, associate and coadjutor generally so; ally, assistant, associate, attendant, companion, helper, either in a good or a bad sense; abetter, accessory, accomplice, confederate, almost always in a bad sense. In law, an abettor (the general legal spelling) is always present, either actively or constructively, at the commission of a principal; an accessory never. An accomplice is usually a principal; an accessory never. If present, tho only to stand outside and keep watch against surprize, one is an abettor, and not an accessory. At common law, an accessory implies a principal, and can not be convicted until after the conviction of the principal; the accomplice or abettor can be convicted as a principal. Accomplice and abettor have nearly the same meaning, but the former is the popular, the latter more distinctively the legal term. Compare APPENDAGE; AUXILIARY.— Ant.: adversary, antagonist, betrayer, chief, commander, enemy, foe, hinderer, instigator, leader, opponent, opposer, principal, rival.— Prep.: An accessory to the crime: before or after the fact; the accessories of a figure in a painting.—ac-ces′so-ri-ly, adv.

Syn.: adventure, calamity, casualty, chance, contingency, disaster, fortuity, hap, happening, hazard, incident, misadventure, misfortune, mishap, possibility. An accident is that which happens without any one's direct intention; a chance that which happens without any known cause. If the direct cause of a railroad accident is known, we can not call it a chance. We can speak of a game of chance, but not of a game of accident. An incident is viewed as occurring in the regular course of things, but subordinate to the main purpose, or aside from the main design. Fortune is the result of inscrutable controlling forces. Fortune and chance are nearly equivalent, but chance can be used of human effort and endeavor as fortune can not be; we say "he has a chance of success," or "there is one chance in a thousand," where we could not substitute fortune; as personified, we speak of fickle Fortune, blind Chance. Since the unintended is often the undesirable, accident tends to signify some calamity or disaster, but we may speak of a fortunate or happy accident. An adventure is that which may turn out ill, a misadventure that which does turn out ill. A slight disturbing accident is a mishap. Compare CATASTROPHE; EVENT; HAZARD. — Ant.: appointment, calculation, certainty, decree, fate, foreordination, intention, law, necessity, ordainment, ordinance, plan, preparation, provision, purpose.—Prep.: The accident of birth; an accident to the machinery.

Syn.: achieve, complete, consummate, discharge, do, effect, execute, finish, fulfil, perform, realize. Perform and accomplish both imply working toward the end; but perform always allows a possibility of not attaining, while accomplish carries the thought of full completion. In Longfellow's lines, "Patience; accomplish thy labor," etc., perform could not be substituted without great loss. As between complete and accomplish, complete considers rather the thing as done; accomplish, the whole process of doing it. Achieve—to do something worthy of a chief—signifies always to perform some great and generally some worthy exploit. a-live', 1 ə-laıv'; 2 a-līv', a. Having or full of life; sensitive; vigorous; active. [< AS. on, in, + līf, life.]

Syn.: active, alert, animate, animated, breathing, brisk, existent, existing, live, lively, living, quick, subsisting, vivacious. Alive applies to all degrees of life, from that which shows one to be barely existing or existent as a living thing, as when we say he is "barely alive," to that which implies the very utmost of vitality and power, as in the words "he is all alive," "thoroughly alive." So the word quick, which began by signifying "having life," is now mostly applied to energy of life as shown in swiftness of action. Breathing is capable of like contrast. We say of a dying man, "he is still breathing"; or we speak of a breathing statue, or "breathing and sounding, beauteous battle," TENNYSON Princess can. v, l. 155, where it means having, or seeming to have, full and vigorous breath, abundant life. Compare ACTIVE; ALERT; NIMBLE.—Ant.: dead, deceased, defunct, dispirited, dull, inanimate, lifeless, spiritless.—Prep.: Alive in every nerve; alive to every noble impulse; alive with fervor, hope, resolve; alive through all his being.

Syn.: abate, alleviate, appease, assuage, calm, compose, lessen, lighten, mitigate, moderate, mollify, pacify, palliate, quiet, reduce, relieve, soften, soothe, still, tranquilize. To allay is to lay to rest, quiet, or soothe that which is excited. To alleviate is to lighten a burden. We allay suffering by using means to soothe and tranquilize the sufferer; we alleviate suffering by doing something toward removal of the cause, so that there is less to suffer; we allay rage or panic; we alleviate poverty, but do not allay it. Pacify, directly from the Latin, and appease, from the Latin through the French, signify to bring to peace; to mollify is to soften; to mitigate is to make mild; we mollify a harsh disposition or temper, mitigate rage or pain. To calm, quiet, or tranquilize is to make still; compose, to adjust to a calm and settled condition; to soothe (originally to assent to, humor) is to bring to pleased quietude. We allay excitement, appease a tumult, calm agitation, compose our feelings or countenance, pacify the quarrelsome, quiet the boisterous or clamorous, soothe grief or distress. Compare ALLEVIATE.—Ant.: agitate, arouse, excite, fan, kindle, provoke, rouse, stir, stir up.

al-lege', 1 a-lej'; 2 ă-lĕġ', vt. [AL-LEGED'; AL-LEG'ING.] 1. To assert to be true, but without proving; state; plead. 2. To cite or quote. [< L.[OF] ex, out, + litigo, litigate.]

Syn.: adduce, advance, affirm, assert, asseverate, assign, aver, cite, claim, declare, introduce, maintain, offer, plead, produce, say, state. To allege is formally to state as true or capable of proof, but without proving. Adduce is a secondary word; nothing can be adduced in evidence till something has been stated or alleged, which the evidence is to sustain. An alleged fact stands open to question or doubt. Alleged is, however, respectful; to speak of a "so-called" will or deed, etc., would be to cast discredit upon the document; alleged simply concedes nothing and leaves the question open. When an alleged criminal is brought to trial, the counsel on either side are accustomed to advance a theory, and adduce the strongest possible evidence in its support; they will produce documents and witnesses, cite precedents, assign reasons, introduce suggestions, offer pleas. The accused will usually assert his innocence. Compare STATE.—Ant.: see AFFIRM.

Syn.: devotion, faithfulness, fealty, fidelity, homage, loyalty, obedience, subjection. The feudal uses of these words have mostly passed away with the state of society that gave them birth; but their origin still colors their present meaning. A patriotic American feels an enthusiastic loyalty to the republic; he takes, on occasion, an oath of allegiance to the government, but his loyalty will lead him to do more than mere allegiance could demand; he pays homage to God alone, as the only king and lord, or to those principles of right that are spiritually supreme; he acknowledges the duty of obedience to all rightful authority; he resents the idea of subjection. Fealty is becoming somewhat rare, except in elevated or poetic style, faithfulness or fidelity being now preferred.—Ant.: disaffection, disloyalty, rebellion, sedition, treason.—Prep.: Allegiance of the citizen to the government; the government has a right to allegiance from the citizen.—al-le′giant, a. Loyal; faithful.

al′le-go″ry, 1 al′ı-go″rı; 2 ăl′e-ġō″ry, n. [-RIES², pl.] The setting forth of a subject under the guise of some other subject; an extended simile with the comparative words left out, as a story to illustrate a truth; any symbolic representation in literature or art; an emblem. [< Gr.ᴸᵗᶠ allēgoria, < allos, other, + agoreuō, harangue.]

Syn.: fable, fiction, illustration, metaphor, parable, simile, story. The allegory, parable, or fable tells its story as if true, leaving the reader or hearer to discover its fictitious character and learn its lesson. The word fiction is now applied almost exclusively to novels or romances. An allegory or parable is a moral or religious tale, of which the moral lesson is the substance, and all descriptions and incidents but accessories, as in "The Pilgrim's Progress;" the parable is generally briefer and less adorned than the allegory. A fable is generally brief, representing animals as the speakers and actors, and conveying some lesson of practical wisdom or shrewdness. Compare SIMILE; STORY.—Ant.: chronicle, fact, history, narrative, record.

Syn.: abate, allay, assuage, lessen, lighten, mitigate, moderate, reduce, relieve, remove, soften. Alleviate is less than relieve; relieve, ordinarily, less than remove. We alleviate, relieve, or remove the trouble; we relieve, not alleviate, the sufferer. Assuage is, by derivation, to sweeten; mitigate, to make mild; moderate, to bring within measure; abate, to beat down, and so make less. We abate a fever; lessen anxiety; moderate passions or desires; lighten burdens; mitigate or alleviate pain; reduce inflammation; soften, assuage, or moderate grief; we lighten or mitigate punishments; we relieve any suffering of body or mind that admits of help, comfort, or remedy. Compare ALLAY.—Ant.: aggravate, augment, embitter, enhance, heighten, increase, intensify, magnify, make worse.—al-le″vi-a′tion, n. An alleviating, or that which alleviates.—al-le′vi-a-tiv(eš. I. a. Tending to alleviate. II. n. Anything that alleviates.—al-le′vi-a″tor, n.—al-le′vi-a-to-ry, a.

[< OF. aliance, < LL. alligantia, < L. alligo, bind.] Syn.: affinity, coalition, compact, confederacy, confederation, federation, fusion, kin, league, partnership, union. Alliance is in its common use a connection formed by treaty between sovereign states as for mutual aid in war. Partnership is a mercantile word; alliance chiefly political or matrimonial. Coalition is oftenest used of political parties; fusion is now the more common word in this sense. In a confederacy or confederation there is an attempt to unite separate states in a general government without surrender of sovereignty. Union makes the separate states substantially one. Federation is a poetic and rhetorical word expressing something of the same thought. The United States is not a confederacy nor an alliance; the nation might be called a federation, but prefers to be styled a federal union. See ASSOCIATION.—Ant.: antagonism, discord, disunion, divorce, enmity, hostility, schism, secession, separation, war.—Prep.: Alliance with a neighboring people; against the common enemy; for offense and defense; alliance of, between, or among nations.

Syn.: appoint, apportion, assign, award, destine, distribute, divide, give, grant, mete out, portion out, select, set apart. Allot, originally to assign by lot, applies to the giving of a definite thing to a certain person. A portion or extent of time or space is allotted; as, I expect to live out my allotted time; to allot a plot of ground for a park. Appoint may be used of time, space, or person; as, the appointed day; the appointed place; an officer was appointed to this station. Destine fixes or assumes to fix what is considerably in the future; as, he destines his son to follow his own profession. Assign is rarely used of time, but rather of places, persons, or things. That which is allotted, appointed, or assigned is more or less arbitrary; that which is awarded is the due requital of something the receiver has done, and he has right and claim to it; as, the medal was awarded for valor.—Ant.: appropriate, confiscate, deny, refuse, resume, retain, seize, withhold.—Prep.: Allot to a company for a purpose.

[Allow derives its meanings from both Latin allaudare, to praise, and allocare, to place, stow.]

Syn.: admit, concede, confess, consent to, endure, grant, let, permit, sanction, suffer, tolerate, yield. We allow that which we do not attempt to hinder; we permit that to which we give express authorization. When this is given verbally it is called permission; when in writing it is commonly called a permit. We concede a right; grant a request; consent to a sale of property; permit an inspection of accounts; sanction a marriage; tolerate the rudeness of a well-meaning servant; submit to a surgical operation; yield to a demand or necessity against our wish or will, or yield something under compulsion. Suffer, in the sense of mild concession, is now becoming rare. Compare PERMISSION.—Ant.: deny, disallow, disapprove, forbid, protest, refuse, reject, resist, withstand. See also synonyms for PROHIBIT.—Prep.: To allow of (in best recent usage, simply to allow) such an action; allow one in such a course; allow for spending-money; allow for errors.

Syn.: admixture, adulteration, debasement, deterioration. Adulteration, debasement, and deterioration are always used in the bad sense; admixture is neutral, and may be good or bad; alloy is commonly good in the literal sense, as for giving hardness to coin, etc. An excess of alloy virtually amounts to adulteration; but adulteration is now mostly restricted to articles used for food, drink, medicine, and kindred uses. In the figurative sense, as applied to character, etc., alloy is unfavorable, because there the only standard is perfection.

—al-loy'age, n. The act or process of alloying.

Syn.: advert, hint, imply, indicate, insinuate, intimate, mention, point, refer, signify, suggest. We allude to a matter slightly, as if in byplay; we advert to it when we turn from our path to treat it; we refer to it by any clear utterance or expression. One may hint at a thing in a friendly way, but what is insinuated is always unfavorable, generally both hostile and cowardly. One may indicate his wishes, intimate his plans, imply his opinion, signify his will, suggest a course of action. Compare SUGGESTION.—Prep.: to.

al-lure', 1 a-liūr'; 2 ă-lūr', v. [AL-LURED'; AL-LUR'ING.] I. t. To draw with or as with a lure; attract; entice; tempt. II. i. To exercise attraction. [< OF. alurer, < a, to, + lurer, lure.]

Syn.: attract, cajole, captivate, coax, decoy, draw, entice, inveigle, lure, seduce, tempt, win. One may attract without intent. One may allure to evil, but ordinarily to good: "Allured to brighter worlds," GOLDSMITH Des. Vil. l. 170. Lure is rather more akin to the physical nature and commonly used in unfavorable sense. To tempt is to endeavor to lead one wrong; to seduce is to succeed in winning one from good to ill. Win may be used in a good sense, in which it surpasses the highest sense of allure, because it succeeds in that which allure attempts. Coax expresses the attraction of the person, not of the thing. A man may be coaxed to that which is by no means alluring. Cajole and decoy carry the idea of deceiving and ensnaring. To inveigle is to lead one blindly, as into folly or wrong. See DRAW; PERSUADE.—Ant.: chill, damp, deter, dissuade, drive away, repel, warn.—Prep.: Allure by hopes; allure from evil to good.

a-mass'[t], 1 ə-mas'; 2 a-más', vt. To heap up; accumulate. [< F. à, to, + masser, < masse, mass.]

Syn.: accumulate, aggregate, collect, gather, heap up, hoard, hoard up, pile up, store up. To amass is to bring together materials that make a mass, a great bulk or quantity, accumulate being commonly applied to the more gradual, amass to the more rapid gathering of money or materials. We say interest is accumulated (or accumulates) rather than is amassed; a fortune may be rapidly amassed by shrewd speculations. Goods may be stored up for safe keeping or for sale, for a longer or shorter time; but to hoard is always with a view of permanent retention, generally selfish. Aggregate is now most commonly used of numbers and amounts; as, the expenses will aggregate a round million. Compare AGGREGATE, n.—Ant.: disperse, dissipate, divide, parcel, portion, scatter, spend, squander, waste.

Syn.: connoisseur, critic, dilettante, novice, tyro. Etymologically, the amateur is one who loves, the connoisseur one who knows. The amateur practises to some extent that in regard to which he may not be well informed; the connoisseur is well informed in regard to that which he may not practise at all. A novice or tyro may be a professional; an amateur never is; the amateur may be skilled and experienced as the novice or tyro never is. Dilettante, which had originally the sense of amateur, has come to denote one who is superficial, pretentious, and affected, whether in theory or practise.—am"a-teur'ish, a. Feeble; crude; faulty, as art-

There is such a thing as a noble emulation, but at the highest, emulation is inferior as a motive to aspiration, which seeks the high quality or character for its own sake, not with reference to another. an-tique′, 1 an-tīk′; 2 ăn-tīk′. I. a. Ancient in fact or in style. II. n. The style of ancient art, or an example of it; the facts and civilization of antiquity collectively. [F., < L. antiquus, < ante, before.]

Syn.: ancient, antiquated, old-fashioned, quaint, superannuated. Antique refers to an ancient, antiquated to a discarded style. The antique is that which is either ancient in fact or ancient in style. The reference is to the style rather than to the age. We can speak of the antique architecture of a church just built. The antiquated is not so much out of date as out of vogue. Old-fashioned may be used approvingly or contemptuously. In the latter case it becomes a synonym for antiquated; in the good sense it approaches the meaning of antique, but indicates less duration. We call a wide New England fireplace old-fashioned; a coin of the Cæsars, antique. Quaint combines the idea of age with a pleasing oddity; as, a quaint gambrel-roofed house. Antiquated is sometimes used of persons in a sense akin to superannuated. The antiquated person is out of style and out of sympathy with the present generation by reason of age; the superannuated person is incapacitated for present activities by reason of age. Compare ANCIENT; OLD.—Ant.: fashionable, fresh, modern, modish, new, recent, stylish.

Syn.: anguish, apprehension, care, concern, disquiet, disturbance, dread, fear, foreboding, fretfulness, fretting, misgiving, perplexity, solicitude, trouble, worry. Anxiety refers to some future event, always suggesting hopeful possibility, and thus differing from apprehension, fear, dread, foreboding, terror, all of which may be quite despairing. In matters within our reach, anxiety always stirs the question whether something can not be done, and is thus a valuable spur to doing; foreboding, dread, etc., commonly incapacitate for all helpful thought or endeavor. Worry is a more petty, restless, and manifest anxiety; anxiety may be quiet and silent; worry is communicated to all around. Solicitude is a milder anxiety. Fretting or fretfulness is a weak complaining without thought of accomplishing or changing anything, but merely as a relief to one's own disquiet. Perplexity often involves anxiety, but may be quite free from it.—Ant.: apathy, assurance, calmness, carelessness, confidence, ease, light-heartedness, nonchalance, satisfaction, tranquillity.—Prep.: Anxiety for a friend's return; anxiety about, for, in regard to, or concerning the future.

Syn.: calmness, composure, immobility, impassibility, indifference, insensibility, lethargy, phlegm, quietness, quietude, sluggishness, stillness, stoicism, tranquillity, unconcern, unfeelingness. Apathy, according to its Greek derivation, is a simple absence of feeling or emotion. is want of feeling, calmness is feeling without agitation. Composure results ordinarily from force of will, or from perfect confidence in one's own resources. Indifference is a want of interest; insensibility is a want of feeling; unconcern has reference to consequences. We speak of insensibility of heart, immobility of countenance. Stoicism is an intentional suppression of feeling and deadening of sensibilities, while apathy is involuntary. Syn.: accept, affect, appropriate, arrogate, claim, feign, postulate, presume, pretend, put on, take, usurp. The distinctive idea of assume is to take by one's own independent volition, whether well or ill, rightfully or wrongfully. One may accept an obligation or assume an authority that properly belongs to him; if he assumes what does not belong to him, he is said to arrogate or usurp it. A man may usurp the substance of power in the most unpretending way; what he arrogates to himself he assumes with a haughty and overbearing manner. One assumes the robes or insignia of office by putting them on, with or without right. If he takes to himself the credit and appearance of qualities he does not possess, he is said to affect or feign, or to pretend to, the character he thus assumes. What a debater postulates he openly states and takes for granted without proof; what he assumes he may take for granted without mention. A favorite trick of the sophist is quietly to assume as true what would at once be challenged if expressly stated. What a man claims he asserts his right to take; what he assumes he takes. See PRETEND.—Ant.: see synonyms for RENOUNCE.

Syn.: arrogance, assertion, assumption, boldness, confidence, effrontery, impudence, presumption, self-assertion, self-confidence, self-reliance, trust. Assurance may have the good sense of a high, sustained confidence and trust; as, the saint's assurance of heaven. Confidence is founded upon reasons; assurance is largely a matter of feeling. In the bad sense, assurance is a vicious courage, with belief of one's ability to outwit or defy others; the hardened criminal is remarkable for habitual assurance. In the bad sense assurance is less gross than impudence, which is (according to its etymology) a shameless boldness. Assurance is in act or manner; impudence may be in speech. Effrontery is impudence defiantly displayed. Compare BELIEF; CERTAINTY; EFFRONTERY; FAITH; IMPUDENCE; PRIDE.—Ant.: bashfulness, confusion, consternation, dismay, distrust, doubt, hesitancy, misgiving, shyness, timidity.

Syn.: acute, clear-sighted, crafty, cunning, discerning, discriminating, keen, knowing, penetrating, penetrative, perspicacious, sagacious, sharp, shrewd, subtile, subtle. Acute, from the Latin, suggests the sharpness of the needle's point; keen, from the Anglo-Saxon, the sharpness of the cutting edge. The astute debater leads his opponents into a snare by getting them to make admissions, or urge arguments, of which he sees a result that they do not perceive. Knowing has often a slightly invidious sense. A knowing horse or dog knows more than could be expected of such an animal. A knowing child has more knowledge than would be looked for at his years, perhaps more than is quite desirable, while to speak of a child as intelligent is altogether complimentary. Syn.: about, because of, by, during, in, near, on, on occasion of, to, toward, with, within. As regards place, at is not used with names of countries; we say in England, in France, etc.; with names of cities and towns the use of at or in depends not chiefly upon the size of the place, but upon the point of view. When we think merely of the local or geographical point, we use at; when we think of inclusive space, we employ in; as, we arrived at Liverpool; there are few rich men in this village. Even if he is said to attain or attain to old age, that is thought of as a result desired; we should not speak of his attaining his dotage. Syn.: truism. Both the axiom and the truism are instantly seen to be true, and need no proof; but in an axiom there is progress of thought, while the truism simply says the same thing over again, or says what is too manifest to need saying. The axiom that "things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another" unfolds in the latter part of the sentence the truth implied in the first part, which might have been overlooked if not stated. In the truism that "a man can do all he is capable of," the former and the latter part of the sentence are simply identical, and the mind is left just where it started. Hence the axiom is valuable and useful, while the truism is weak and flat, unless the form of statement makes it striking or racy, as "all fools are out of their wits." Compare ADAGE; PROVERB.—Ant.: absurdity, contradiction, demonstration, nonsense, paradox, sophism.

Syn.: blab, blurt, blurt out, cackle, chat, chatter, gabble, gossip, jabber, murmur, palaver, prate, prattle, tattle, twaddle. Most of these words are onomatopoetic. The cackle of a hen, the gabble of a goose, the chatter of a magpie, the babble of a running stream, as applied to human speech, indicate a rapid succession of what are to the listener meaningless sounds. Blab and blurt (commonly blurt out) refer to the letting out of what the lips can no longer keep in; blab, of a secret; blurt out, of passionate feeling. To chat is to talk in an easy, pleasant way, not without sense, but without special purpose; to prattle is to talk freely and artlessly, often about trifles; chatting is the practise of adults, prattling that of children. To prate is to talk idly, presumptuously, or foolishly, but not necessarily incoherently. To twaddle is to talk feeble nonsense. To murmur is to utter suppressed or even inarticulate sounds, suggesting the notes of a dove, or the sound of a running stream, and is used figuratively of the half-suppressed utterances of affection or pity, or of complaint, resentment, etc. Compare SPEAK.—Prep.: Babies babble for the moon; the crowd babbles of a hero; the sick man babbles of home.—bab'bler, n.

be-, prefix. By; near; on; about: used (1) in its original prepositional sense; (2) to render intransitive verbs transitive; (3) to form verbs from adjectives or nouns; (4) to intensify the notion of a verb; (5) to give a secondary meaning to a simple verb; (6) with nouns, adjectives, or adverbs, to form other adverbs, conjunctions, or prepositions; (7) with privative force; i. e., to give a meaning opposed to that of the simple word; (8) without special force. [< AS. be-, bi-, < bī, by.]

Compounds of be- especially needing definition are given in vocabulary place. Many arbitrary combinations of be-, that may be made at will by prefixing be- to a verb, a noun, or a participle, are omitted. Some self-explaining forms may be classed as follows: (1) Verbs or participial adjectives (sometimes with derived nouns) that by the prefix be- are made more emphatic, or, when made from nouns, signify to make like or affect with what the noun indicates; as, bepelt, to pelt soundly; beshine, to shine upon or about:

be-deaf'en	be-gird'd	be-mois'ten	be-sing'
be-drab'ble	be-girt'd	be-mourn'	be-slub'ber
be-drench't	be-hang'	be-mud'dle	be-soil'

(2) Verbs or participial adjectives (sometimes with derived nouns) that by the prefix be- add the sense of supplying with, covering, daubing, thoroughly treating, strewing or scattering over, or the like; as beink, to daub or cover with ink:

be-clothe'	be-gem'	be-patched't	be-slob'ber

(3) Verbs that by the prefix be- add the sense of naming or calling; as, beduke, to call one "duke":

be-duke't	be-la'dy	be-mad'am	be-saint'd
be-knave'	be-lord'd	be-mon'ster	be-scoun'drel

(4) Verbs in which be- modifies the meaning of a simple verb by adding a prepositional relation so that it either becomes transitive or takes a different object:

[< AS. bēatan, beat, thrust.]

Syn.: bastinado, batter, belabor, bruise, castigate, chastise, conquer, cudgel, cuff, defeat, flog, overcome, pommel, pound, scourge, smite, strike, surpass, thrash, vanquish, whip, worst. Strike is the word for a single blow; to beat is to strike repeatedly, as a bird beats the air with its wings. Others of the above words describe the manner of beating, as bastinado, to beat on the soles of the feet; belabor, to inflict a comprehensive and exhaustive beating; cudgel, to beat with a stick; thrash (originally identical with "thresh"), to beat with repeated blows, as wheat was beaten out with the old hand-flail; to pound (akin to L. pondus, a weight) is to beat with a heavy, and pommel with a blunt, instrument. To batter and to bruise refer to the results of beating; that is battered which is broken or defaced by repeated blows on the surface (compare synonyms for SHATTER); that is bruised which has suffered even one severe contusion. The metaphorical sense of beat, however, so far preponderates that one may be very badly bruised and battered, and yet not be said to be beaten, unless he has got the worst of the beating. To beat a combatant is to disable or dishearten him for further fighting. Hence beat becomes the synonym for every word which implies getting the advantage of another. Compare CONQUER; SUBDUE. —Ant.: fail, fall, get the worst of, go down, go under, surrender. Almost all antonyms in this class are passive, and can be formed indefinitely from the conquering words by the use of the auxiliary be; as, be beaten, be defeated, be conquered, etc.

beau'ti-ful, } 1 biū'tı-ful; 2 bū'ti-ful, a. Possessing conbeu'ti-fulᴾ, } spicuous beauty; excelling in form or grace; complete and harmonious.

Syn.: attractive, beauteous, bewitching, bonny, charming, comely, delightful, elegant, exquisite, fair, fine, graceful, handsome, lovely, picturesque, pretty. There must be harmony and unity, and in human beings spiritual loveliness, to constitute an object or a person really beautiful. Thus, we speak of a beautiful landscape, a beautiful poem. But beautiful implies also, in concrete objects, softness of outline and delicacy of mold; it is opposed to all that is hard and rugged. Pretty expresses in a far less degree that which is pleasing to a refined taste in objects comparatively small, slight, and dainty. That is handsome which is not only superficially pleasing, but well and harmoniously proportioned. Handsome is a term far inferior to beautiful; we may even say a handsome villain; figuratively, handsome denotes liberal, magnanimous, or generous in a high and worthy way. Fair denotes what is bright, smooth, clear, and without blemish; as, a fair face. The word applies wholly to what is superficial; we can say "fair, yet false." In a specific sense, fair has the sense of blond, as opposed to dark or brunette. One who possesses pleasing qualities may be attractive without beauty. Comely denotes an aspect that is smooth, genial, and wholesome, with a certain fulness of contour and pleasing symmetry, tho falling short of the beautiful; as, a comely matron.[1] That is picturesque which would make a striking picture. See FINE; GRACEFUL; LOVELY.—Ant.: awkward, clumsy, deformed, disgusting, frightful, ghastly, grim, grisly, grotesque, hideous, horrid, odious, repulsive, shocking, ugly, unattractive, uncouth, ungainly, unlovely, unpleasant.—Prep.: Beautiful to the eye; beautiful in appearance, in spirit; "beautiful for situation," Ps. xlviii, 2; beautiful of aspect, of its kind.

II. conj. For the reason that (literally, by cause); since. [< BE- + CAUSE, n.]

Syn.: as, for, forasmuch as, inasmuch as, since. Because, literally by-cause, is the most direct and complete word for giving the reason of a thing. Since, originally denoting succession in time, signifies a succession in a chain of reasoning, a natural inference or result. As indicates something like coordinate, parallel. Since is weaker than because; as is weaker than since; either may introduce the reason before the main statement; thus, since or as you are going, I will accompany you. Often the weaker word is the more courteous, implying less constraint; for example, as you request it, I will come, rather than I will come because you request it. Inasmuch as is a formal and qualified expression, implying by just so much, and no more; thus, inasmuch as the debtor has no property, I abandon the claim. Forasmuch as is archaic, rarely appearing in present use. For is a loose connective, sometimes fully equal to because, but oftener giving mere suggestion or indication rather than reason or cause; as, it is morning, for (not because) the birds are singing.—Ant.: altho, however, nevertheless, notwithstanding, yet. Compare also synonyms for BUT; NOTWITHSTANDING; THEREFORE.—Prep.: because of is used as a prepositional phrase, signifying by reason of, on account of.

That is suitable which is adapted to the age, station, situation, and other circumstances of the wearer; coarse, heavy boots are suitable for farm-work; a juvenile style of dress is not suitable for an old lady. In conduct much the same rules apply. Commencement* is for the most part restricted to some form of action, while beginning has no restriction, but may be applied to whatever may be conceived of as having a first part, point, degree, etc. The letter A is at the beginning (not the commencement) of every alphabet. Syn.: almsgiving, beneficence, benignity, bounty, charity, generosity, good will, humanity, kind-heartedness, kindliness, kindness, liberality, munificence, philanthropy, sympathy. Originally beneficence was the doing well, benevolence the wishing or willing well to others; but benevolence has come to include beneficence and to displace it. We do not now speak of benevolence which does not help. Charity, which originally meant the purest love for God and man (as in 1 Cor. iii), is now almost universally applied to some form of almsgiving and is much more limited in meaning than benevolence. Benignity suggests some occult power of blessing, such as was formerly ascribed to the stars; we may say a good man has an air of benignity. Kindness and tenderness are personal; benevolence and charity are general. Humanity is so much kindness and tenderness toward man or beast as it would be inhuman not to have, as denoted by the phrase, "common humanity." We speak of the bounty of a generous host, the liberality or munificence of the founder of a college, or of the liberality of a theologian toward the holders of conflicting beliefs. Philanthropy applies to wide schemes for human welfare, often, but not always, involving large expenditures in charity or benevolence. Compare MERCY. —Ant.: barbarity, brutality, churlishness, greediness, harshness, illiberality, ill-will, inhumanity, malevolence, malignity, niggardliness, selfishness, self-seeking, stinginess, unkindness.

Syn.: acerb, acetous, acid, acidulated, acidulous, acrid, acrimonious, biting, caustic, cutting, harsh, irate, pungent, savage, sharp, sour, stinging, tart, vinegarish, virulent. Acid, sour, and bitter agree in being contrasted with sweet, but the two former are sharply distinguished from the latter. Acid or sour applies to the taste of vinegar or lemon-juice; bitter to that of quassia, quinin, or strychnin. Acrid is nearly allied to bitter. Pungent suggests the effect of pepper or snuff on the organs of taste or smell; as, a pungent odor. Caustic indicates the corroding effect of some strong chemical, as nitrate of silver. In a figurative sense, we say a sour face, sharp words, bitter complaints, caustic wit, cutting irony, biting sarcasm, a stinging taunt, harsh judgment, a tart reply. Harsh carries the idea of intentional and severe unkindness, bitter of a severity that arises from real or supposed ill treatment. The bitter speech springs from the sore heart. Tart and sharp utterances may proceed merely from a wit recklessly keen; cutting, stinging, or biting speech indicates more or less of hostile intent. The caustic utterance is meant to burn, perhaps wholesomely, as in the satire of Juvenal or Cervantes. Compare MALICIOUS; MOROSE.—Ant.: dulcet, honeyed, luscious, nectared, saccharine, sweet.

Syn.: barrier, border, bound, bourn, bourne, confines, edge, enclosure, frontier, landmark, limit, line, marches, marge, margin, term, termination, verge. The boundary was originally the landmark, that which marked off one piece of territory from another. The bound is the limit, marked or unmarked. Now, however, the difference between the two words has come to be simply one of usage. As regards territory, we speak of the boundaries of a nation or of an estate; the bounds of a college, a ball-ground, etc. Bounds may be used for all within the limits. Boundary for the limiting line only. Boundary looks to that which is without; bound only to that which is within. Hence we speak of the bounds, not the boundaries, of a subject, of the universe, etc.; we say the students were forbidden to go beyond the bounds. A barrier is something that bars ingress or egress. A barrier may be a boundary, as was the Great Wall of China. Bourn, or bourne, is a poetical expression for bound or boundary. A border is a strip, as of land, along the boundary. Edge is a sharp terminal line, as where river or ocean meets the land. Limit is now used almost wholly in the figurative sense; as, the limit of discussion, of time, of jurisdiction. Line is a military term; as, within the lines, or through the lines, of an army. Compare BARRIER; END; MARGIN.—Ant.: center, citadel, estate, inside, interior, land, region, territory.

One brands with a hot iron, but cauterizes with some corrosive substance, as silver nitrate. Cremate is now used specifically for consuming a dead body by intense heat; incinerate (to reduce to ashes) differs little from that of cremate, but is in less popular use. To kindle is to set on fire, as if with a candle; ignite is the more learned and scientific word for the same thing. To scorch and to singe are superficial, and to char usually so. Syn.: active, assiduous, diligent, employed, engaged, industrious, occupied. Busy applies to an activity which may be temporary, industrious to a habit of life. We say a man is busy just now; it would be ridiculous or satirical to say, he is industrious just now. But busy can be used in the sense of industrious, as when we say he is a busy man. Diligent indicates also a disposition, which is ordinarily habitual, and suggests more of heartiness and volition than industrious. We say one is a diligent, rather than an industrious reader of the Bible. The assiduous worker gives patient and unremitting devotion to a task until it is done, or until nothing more can be done. [< AS. būtan, except, without.]
Syn.: and, barely, besides, except, further, however, just, merely, moreover, nevertheless, notwithstanding, only, provided, save, still, that, the, unless, yet. But ranges from the faintest contrast to absolute negation; as, I am willing to go, but (on the other hand) content to stay; he is not an honest man, but (on the contrary) a villain. Except and excepting are slightly more emphatic than but. Such expressions as "words are but breath" (nothing but) may be referred to the restrictive use by ellipsis. "Doubt but" is now less used than the more logical "doubt that." But never becomes a full synonym for and; and adds something like, but adds something different; "brave and tender" implies that tenderness is natural to the brave; "brave but tender" implies that bravery and tenderness are rarely combined. calm, a. Free from disturbance or agitation; quiet; placid; serene. [< Gr.[LL+F] kauma, heat of the sun.]

Syn.: collected, composed, cool, dispassionate, imperturbable, peaceful, placid, quiet, sedate, self-controlled, self-possessed, serene, smooth, still, tranquil, undisturbed, unruffled. That is calm which is free from disturbance or agitation; in the physical sense, free from violent motion or action; in the mental or spiritual realm, free from excited or disturbing emotion or passion. We speak of a calm sea, a placid lake, a serene sky, a still night, a quiet day, a quiet home. We speak, also, of "still waters," "smooth sailing," which are different modes of expressing freedom from manifest agitation. Cool, in this connection, always suggests the recognition of some form of danger or risk. One may be calm by assured superiority to danger, by ignorance of its existence or of its magnitude, or by indifference to the result, or by the apathy of hopelessness, as we speak of "the calmness of despair;" one is cool who, while intensely alive to danger or need, has all his faculties concentrated on the means of meeting or overcoming it; a calm boxer would probably be an easy victim, while a cool boxer would be a dangerous antagonist. Cool is stronger than composed or collected, which suggest some previous tendency to discomposure, and is more vigorous than self-controlled or self-possessed. One is composed who has subdued excited feeling; he is collected when he has every thought, feeling, or perception awake and at command. Tranquil refers to a present state, placid to a prevailing tendency. We speak of a tranquil mind, a placid disposition. The serene spirit dwells as if in the clear upper air, above all storm or agitation See PACIFIC: SOBER.—Ant.: agitated, boisterous, disturbed, excited, fierce, frantic, frenzied, furious, heated, passionate, raging, roused, ruffled, stormy, turbulent, violent, wild, wrathful.

Can always indicates some form of possibility. The colloquial use of can for may substitutes a moral for a physical possibility; "You can go" (without breach of duty, since you have permission). May is, however, in this sense, at once more exact and more elegant.

Can but and can not but are both correct, but differ in meaning. "I can not but go" means "I am irresistibly impelled or compelled to go;" "I can but go" means "I can only go," i. e. "To go is all that is left me to do." Can but is thus by far the weaker expression.

can'cel, 1 kan'səl; 2 cȧn'çel, vt. [CAN'CELED or CAN'CELLED, CAN'CELD[s]; CAN'CEL-ING or CAN'CEL-LING.] To mark out or off, as by crossed lines; strike out; annul; revoke. [< L.[F] cancello, make like a lattice.]

Syn.: abolish, abrogate, annul, blot out, cross off or out, discharge, efface, erase, expunge, make void, nullify, obliterate, quash, remove, repeal, rescind, revoke, rub off or out, scratch out, vacate. Cancel, efface, erase, expunge, and obliterate have as their first meaning the removal of written characters or other forms of record. To cancel is, literally, to make a lattice by cross-lines, exactly our English cross out; to efface is to rub off, smooth away the face of, as of an inscription; to erase is to scratch out, commonly for the purpose of writing something else in the same space; to expunge is to punch out with some sharp instrument, so as to show that the words are no longer part of the writing; to obliterate is to cover over or remove, as a letter, as was done by reversing the Roman stylus, and rubbing out with the rounded end what had been written with the point on the waxen tablet. What has been canceled, erased, expunged, may perhaps still be traced; what is obliterated is gone forever, as if it had never been. The figurative use of the words keeps close to the primary sense. Compare ABOLISH; ANNUL.—Ant.: approve, confirm, enact, enforce, establish, maintain, perpetuate, record, reenact, sustain, uphold, write.—can"cel-a'tion, n.

can'did, 1 kan'did; 2 cȧn'did, a. Sincere; ingenuous; frank; impartial; fair. [< L.[F] candidus, white.]

Syn.: aboveboard, artless, fair, frank, guileless, honest, impartial, ingenuous, innocent, naive, open, simple, sincere, straightforward, transparent, truthful, unbiased, unprejudiced, unreserved, unsophisticated. A candid statement is meant to be true to the real facts and just to all parties; a fair statement is really so. Fair is applied to the conduct as candid is not; as, fair treatment, "a fair field, and no favor." One who is frank has a fearless and unconstrained truthfulness. Honest and ingenuous unite in expressing contempt for deceit. On the other hand, artless, guileless, naive, simple, and unsophisticated express the goodness which comes from want of the knowledge or thought of evil. As truth is not always agreeable or timely, candid and frank have often an objectionable sense; "to be candid with you," "to be perfectly frank," are regarded as sure preludes to something disagreeable. Sincere applies to the feelings, as being all that one's words would imply. See HONEST.—Ant.: adroit, artful, crafty, cunning, deceitful, designing, diplomatic, foxy, insincere, intriguing, knowing, maneuvering, sharp, shrewdly, subtle, tricky, wily.—Prep.: with a person; about a matter.

Syn.: actor, agent, antecedent, author, causality, causation, condition, creator, designer, former, fountain, motive, occasion, origin, originator, power, precedent, reason, source, spring. The efficient cause, that which makes anything to be or be done, is the common meaning of the word, as in the saying "There is no effect without a cause." Every man instinctively recognizes himself acting through will as the cause of his own actions. The Creator is the Great First Cause of all things. A condition is something that necessarily precedes a result, but does not produce it. An antecedent simply precedes a result, with or without any agency in producing it; as, Monday is the invariable antecedent of Tuesday, but not the cause of it. The direct antonym of cause is effect, while that of antecedent is consequent. An occasion is some event which brings a cause into action at a particular moment; gravitation and heat are the causes of an avalanche; the steep incline of the mountain-side is a necessary condition, and the shout of the traveler may be the occasion of its fall. Causality is the doctrine or principle of causes, causation the action or working of causes. Motive is an impulse of an intelligent being which incites to action, and, if unchecked, is a cause of action. Compare DESIGN; REASON. —Ant.: consequence, creation, development, effect, end, event, fruit, issue, outcome, outgrowth, product, result.—Prep.: the cause of the disaster; cause for interference.

—caus'al, a. Pertaining to, constituting, involving, or expressing a cause. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—cau-săl'i-ty, n.

Syn.: apparent, diaphanous, distinct, evident, explicit, intelligible, limpid, lucid, manifest, obvious, pellucid, perspicuous, plain straightforward, translucent, transparent, unadorned, unambiguous, unequivocal, unmistakable. A substance is said to be clear that offers no impediment to vision —is not dim, dark, or obscure; transparent, when objects are readily seen through it; we speak of a stream as clear when we think of the water itself; we speak of it as transparent with reference to the ease with which we see the pebbles at the bottom. Clear is also said of that which comes to the senses without dimness, dulness, obstruction, or obscurity; hence, the word is used for that which is free from any kind of obstruction; as, a clear field. Lucid and pellucid refer to a shining clearness, as of crystal. Translucent is less than transparent; a translucent body allows light to pass through, but may not permit forms and colors to be distinguished. Limpid refers to a liquid clearness, or that which suggests it; as, limpid streams. That which is distinct is well defined, as in outline, with nothing hazy, dim, or confused. That is plain which is, as it were, level to the thought, so that one goes straight on without difficulty or hindrance; as, plain language, a plain statement a clear explanation. Perspicuous is often equivalent to plain, but plain never wholly loses the meaning of unadorned, so that we can say the style is perspicuous tho highly ornate, when we could not call it at once ornate and plain. Compare APPARENT; BLANK, EVIDENT; FINE; FREE; INNOCENT; MANIFEST; PLAIN; PURE; SURE; VIVID.—Ant.: ambiguous, cloudy, dim, dubious, foggy, indistinct mysterious, obscure, opaque, turbid, unintelligible, vague.—clear'ly, adv.—clear'ness, n.

Syn.: able, adroit, apt, bright, capable, dexterous, expert, gifted, happy, ingenious, intellectual, intelligent, keen, knowing, quick, quick-witted, sharp, skilful, smart, talented. Clever, as used in England, especially implies an aptitude for study or learning, and for excellent tho not preeminent mental achievement. The early New England usage as implying simple and weak good nature has largely affected the use of the word throughout the United States, where it has never been much in favor. Smart, indicating dashing ability, is now coming to have a suggestion of unscrupulousness, similar to that of the word sharp, which makes its use a doubtful compliment. The discriminating use of such words as able, gifted, talented, etc., is greatly preferable to an excessive use of the word clever. Compare ABILITY; ACUMEN; ASTUTE; BRIGHT; INTELLIGENT; KNOWING.—Ant.: awkward, bungling, clumsy, dull, foolish, idiotic, ignorant, senseless, slow, stupid, thick-headed, witless.

Syn.: contest, emulation, opposition, rivalry. Competition is the striving for something that is sought by another at the same time. Emulation regards the abstract, competition the concrete; rivalry is the same in essential meaning with competition, but differs in the nature of the objects contested for, which, in the case of rivalry, are usually of the nobler sort and less subject to direct gaging, measurement, and rule. We speak of competition in business, emulation in scholarship, rivalry in love, politics, etc.; emulation of excellence, success, achievement; competition for a prize; rivalry between persons or nations. Competition may be friendly, rivalry is commonly hostile. Opposition is becoming a frequent substitute for competition in business language; it implies that the competitor is an opponent and hinderer. Compare AMBITION; EMULATION.—Ant.: agreement, association, alliance, combination, confederacy, harmony, monopoly, union. In business and commercial use, the chief antonym of competition is monopoly, which by bringing all engaged in an industry under a single control forbids them to compete.

Syn.: accept, acknowledge, admit, allow, avow, certify, concede, disclose, endorse, grant, own, recognize. We accept another's statement; admit any point made against us; acknowledge what we have said or done, good or bad; avow our individual beliefs or feelings; certify to facts within our knowledge; confess our own faults; endorse a friend's note or statement; grant a request; own our faults or obligations; recognize lawful authority; concede a claim, demand, etc. Confess has a high and sacred, tho somewhat archaic use in the religious sense; as, to confess Christ before men. It may have also a playful sense (often with to); as, one confesses to a weakness for confectionery. The chief present use of the word, however, is in the sense of making known to others one's own error or wrong-doing; as, to confess a crime. Acknowledge may be used as a milder word in this sense; as I acknowledge my mistake: I acknowledge that the act was indefensible. But acknowledge is freely used of matters not involving error or fault; I acknowledge my signature; I acknowledge a friend's kindness, the receipt of a letter, a check, etc. Own is more informal than acknowledge and milder than confess. Own commonly indicates a somewhat reluctant acknowledgment. Admit and concede have a similar suggestion of reluctance or of possible objection. See ACKNOWLEDGE; AVOW. Compare APOLOGY.—Ant.: cloak, conceal, cover, deny, disavow, disguise, disown, dissemble, dissimulate, hide, mask, repudiate, screen, secrete, veil.

Syn.: chat, colloquy, communication, communion, confabulation, conference, converse, dialog, discourse, intercourse, parley, talk. Conversation (Latin con, with) is, etymologically, an interchange of ideas with some other person or persons. Talk may be wholly one-sided. Many brilliant talkers have been incapable of conversation. There may be intercourse without conversation, as by looks, signs, etc.; communion is of hearts, with or without words; communication is often by writing, and may be uninvited and unreciprocated. Talk may denote the mere utterance of words with little thought; thus, we say idle talk, empty talk, rather than idle or empty conversation. Discourse is now applied chiefly to public addresses. A conference is more formal than a conversation. A dialog may be real and informal, but the word denotes ordinarily an artificial or imaginary conversation, strictly of two persons, but sometimes of more. A colloquy is indefinite as to number, and generally somewhat informal. See INTERCOURSE. Compare BEHAVIOR.—Prep.: Conversation with friends; between or among the guests; about a matter.
